

Does Culture Cause Climate Change?

Lecture

by

Richard R. Wilk

Provost's Professor of Anthropology
Indiana University

Thursday, September 26, 2013
2:00 p.m.

Wells Conference Center, Room 2

If you have any questions, please call 581-1894

Sponsored by:

THE DEPARTMENT OF ANTHROPOLOGY,
ECOLOGY AND ENVIRONMENTAL SCIENCES,
THE A2C2 IGERT PROGRAM,
AND THE CLIMATE CHANGE INSTITUTE

Richard R. Wilk is an economic anthropologist who directs the Food Studies Program at Indiana University. He has conducted field research in Belize, Europe, the USA and West Africa. He researches and publishes on multiple subjects, his recent work focusing on consumer culture and sustainable consumption, tourism and sustainable development, energy consumption, and globalization. He is the author/editor of many books including Economies and Cultures; The Environment in Anthropology; Time, Consumption, and Everyday Life; and The Household Economy. He is a member of the American Anthropological Association's Task Force on Global Climate Change.